Easy access to high-quality mental health and substance use disorder services is essential to restoring and maintaining the health and well-being of our Veterans. With that in mind, our programs are uniquely positioned to help Veterans get the support they need.

About one-third of returning service members report symptoms of a mental health or a cognitive condition. And only 50 percent of returning Veterans who need mental health treatment will receive these services. Reasons for this include:

- Stigma or fear of being seen as weak
- Symptoms not always easily recognized
- Uncertainty about how to approach the health care system
- Long wait times to receive mental health treatment
- Logistical problems, such as long travel distances to receive care
- Lost hope that their condition and life can improve

Optum® understands these challenges, and we work to remove these barriers. We help people reach a stable place and maintain recovery on their terms, so individuals and their families can live their best lives. As the largest managed behavioral health care organization in the United States, we have the expertise, scope and scale to support any population across the nation. We:

- Provide behavioral health services to 34.5 million Americans3
- Are the nation’s largest performance-tiered network with more than 185,000 active network providers4
- Are a vendor for 42 percent of Fortune 100 and 34 percent of Fortune 500 companies5
- Serve 6.4 million Medicaid and 4.4 million Medicare lives6
- Achieved NCQA’s highest Full Accreditation status as well as URAC accreditation

Our guiding principles

1. Focus on coordinating care for the whole person.
The rigor and trauma of military service can make a unique impact on a person’s physical and mental health, as well as on the social determinants of that person’s health (including living environment and work status). Our approach looks at all of these aspects of a person’s health and well-being, whether he or she is being treated by a primary physician or behavioral health specialist. This ensures better treatment of the whole person by identifying and addressing an individual’s co-occurring physical, mental and social issues.

This whole-person approach is particularly important when managing the long-term effects of complex conditions that many veterans struggle with, such as post-traumatic stress disorder, traumatic brain injury, depression, suicide ideation, and substance use disorders.

Our program works by connecting clinicians with an individual’s health-status data. We work across the health system to identify under-treated problems early and then manage conditions following evidence-based best practices. We also bring together community social support services that help these people maintain their quality of life and live as independently as possible.

2. Focus care on person-centered recovery principles.
The best outcomes are achieved when individuals are fully committed participants in their treatment, recovery and well-being. That’s why engaging and encouraging the individual is at the heart of our programs.

We listen to individuals to understand their goals and what motivates them to take action. Abilities and strengths become part of their recovery plans. Self-care tools and resources keep individuals engaged and support recovery and wellness between visits.

3. Make care accessible and relevant to veterans.

People respond best to care that meets them where they are. We’ve invested in the services and capabilities to make this possible, including:

- 24/7 emergency mental health care
- Care that is sensitive to gender, cultural and service-related issues
- Services close to home, including virtual telemental health visits
- Family, couple and child services to support immediate family members

Meet Barb: A veteran’s journey to recovery

Barb is 53 years old and recently retired from the military. She is readjusting to civilian life and is struggling with a substance use disorder and major depression. Barb has also been admitted to a behavioral health hospital twice in the past year.

1. After Barb’s last hospital visit, she received a call from a licensed Optum behavioral health clinician who reviewed a care plan with her and made sure she understood it and had the resources and support to follow the plan.

2. The Optum clinician contacted Barb to ensure she kept her scheduled follow-up appointments. Barb’s husband was also engaged to ensure Barb had transportation to her appointments.

3. The Optum clinician connected Barb to local community supports after first reviewing her options and discussing what would work best. She attended AA and obtained a sponsor. Barb also joined a VA substance-use recovery support group. Barb’s husband was guided to an Al-Anon group.

4. The Optum clinician stayed connected with Barb at regular intervals by phone for six months to ensure she was actively participating in her plan to stay healthy and out of the hospital.

5. Barb has been able to stay out of the hospital. She becomes农家乐 and symptom-free and appreciates the support she received from Optum.
